

Dr. Amir Hamrahian received his medical degree from Hacettepe University in Ankara, Turkey, did his internal medicine residency at the University of North Dakota and completed his Endocrinology fellowship at Case Western Reserve University.

Dr. Hamrahian joined the Cleveland Clinic in 2000 and was the director of the fellowship program before joining the Cleveland Clinic Abu Dhabi as the chief of the Department of Endocrinology for four years. He joined Johns Hopkins University as an Associate Professor of Medicine in 2018. He currently serves as the medical director of the adrenal center at Johns Hopkins University.

Dr. Hamrahian has published more than 90 peer-reviewed articles and has served in developing guidelines for adrenal and pituitary disorders. Accolades received include the Teacher of The Year Award and Human Subject Annual Professional Excellent Award at the Cleveland Clinic in 2003 and 2011, respectively, and the W. Tabb Moore Endocrinology Mentor of the year award at Johns Hopkins in 2019.